The Origins of the Magna Carta

The Magna Carta was signed by King John of England on June 15, 1215, at Runnymede, a meadow on the banks of the River Thames. The charter was the culmination of a long struggle between the king and his barons, who were unhappy with his arbitrary rule. The barons had demanded that the king respect their traditional rights and liberties, and the Magna Carta was intended to guarantee these rights.

The Magna Carta contained a number of important provisions, including:

- The king could not levy taxes without the consent of the Great Council, which was made up of the barons and other important nobles.
- The king could not imprison or punish anyone without due process of law.
- The king could not seize property without compensation.
- The king was bound by the law, just like everyone else.
