However, Onan refused to fulfill his duty as a brother-in-law and impregnate Tamar, so he was killed by God. Tamar was then given to Onan's younger brother, Shelah, but he was too young to marry her. Tamar was now a widow with no children, and she was facing a bleak future.

One day, Tamar disguised herself as a prostitute and sat by the roadside. Judah, who was unaware that it was Tamar, approached her and they had sex. Tamar became pregnant and gave birth to twin sons, Perez and Zerah. When Judah found out that Tamar was pregnant, he was furious and ordered her to be burned to death. However, Tamar sent Judah a message, telling him that the father of her children was the man who had given her a signet ring, a staff, and a cord. Judah realized that he was the father of Tamar's children, and he spared her life.
